

Closing Remarks

I want to close the 12th Asian Nutrition Network Symposium by expressing my sincere gratitude to all speakers, participants, and staff whose contributions made this symposium a great success. Throughout the sessions, we focused on nutrient profile models in the Asian region, and the high quality of the presentations clearly demonstrated the growing importance of research in this field for creating healthier food environments.

I share my hope that this symposium would serve as a meaningful opportunity to further strengthen networks among scientists and stakeholders who are committed to improving nutrition and food environments across the region.
